Introduction

This volume contains fourteen indexes to the collected poems of Julián del Casal. All the indexes were compiled by computer from the texts of Hojas al viento, Nieve, and Rimas that appear in Volume I. After the texts had been converted into machine-readable form,¹ the index-compilation programs² were run on IBM computers at the University of Toronto. All work was done in 1967–1968.³

THEORETICAL CONSIDERATIONS

At the time the system was being planned, two reasons were advanced for presenting a wide array of indexes. On the one hand, it was believed that an assortment of indexes would give scholars with literary and linguistic orientations tools for coping with questions which they had already formulated, but which they had difficulty in answering because of the clerical burden involved. On the other hand, it was felt that a variety of index types would inspire scholars to ask new questions—questions that might never arise unless certain kinds of data were extracted from the corpus and arranged in a special way.

In order to compile suitable indexes, it appeared that the words in the corpus would have to be divided into two major categories: 1) words in headings and 2) words in the text proper, and that items in the latter group would have to be further classified according to their grammatical function and their location in the verse (e.g., initial position and, in poems with consonant rhyme, final position).

At this point, it was necessary to decide whether each word should be indexed by its lemma, from which all forms are derived,⁴ or by those of its forms which appear in the text. From the standpoint of the computer programmer, an index by form would present the smallest number of technical problems. From the standpoint of the user, however, such an index would be extremely difficult to work with. Obviously, the look-up problem would become especially acute where irregular verbs were concerned, because the scholar would have to seek out the form of every person in every tense and mood of those verbs before he could proceed with his investigation. Thus, a simple alphabetical listing, which at first might seem to be an efficient research tool, would turn out to be a most cumbersome device.

In view of these considerations, it was decided that all indexes should be based primarily on the lemma. This meant that a system of editing would have to be devised to provide lemmas for every word in the corpus. As it happened, the decision concerning lemmas had more advantages than disadvantages, for it produced an extremely rapid and flexible method for post-editing literary texts that were already in machine-readable form. The post-editing system allowed for the insertion of a broad range of information about each word; this, in turn, made it possible to produce many kinds of form and lemma indexes. In addition, it led to the development of highly effective concordance programs for languages using the Latin alphabet.

Although the concordance principle was advocated for investigations of a specialized nature, and although concordance programs were written and tested under this editor's direction, it was felt that a concordance would be impractical if it were used as a primary research tool in the study of Casal's poetry. The reasoning was simple: a conventional concordance consisting of one line for every word in the text 1) would provide only one access route into the corpus, 2) would be of little real use by itself for the in-depth study of content words because of the restricted amount of context it would display, and 3) would probably force the exclusion of function words because of its sheer bulk. The following formula shows how extravagant it would be to publish a tool of such limited utility:

$$\frac{1 \text{ line per word} \times 26,500 \text{ words}}{58 \text{ printlines per page}} = \pm 460 \text{ pages.}$$

In contrast to this, a complete location index of all words in the corpus would occupy only 150 pages. The remaining 300-odd pages could be filled with additional indexes that would permit scholars to examine the corpus from different viewpoints.

TYPES OF INDEXES

The indexes in this volume may be classified under two generic headings: "simple listings" and "complex listings."

1. Simple Listings. The Indexes of Rhyme Endings (#11 and 12) are the only simple listings in this volume.⁵ They contain just two pieces of information: the rhyme endings and their frequency. The difference between the indexes derives from the sorting principle used in their compilation: Index 11 presents the rhyme endings in alphabetical order, while Index 12 presents them in descending frequency order.

2. Complex Listings. These are of two basic types: “location indexes” and “comparative frequency indexes.”

a. Location Indexes (#1, 2, 9, 13). With the exception of #13, which is a special index of rhyming words, all location indexes contain four standard kinds of information. They show the total frequency of the word, the lemma of the word,⁶ the syntactical function of the word, and the location of the word in the corpus. The following are typical entries:

1	forjar (v)	N: 21/11.
13	forma (n)	H: 3/17, 3/60; 8/34; 20/25; 33/17; 37/16; 38/13; 43/22. N: 18/68; 22/7; 43/17; 45/6; 47/62.

The numbers at the extreme left show the total frequency of each word. The lemmas appear next and are sorted alphabetically according to the Spanish system. Simple abbreviations are used to indicate the manner in which each word functions in the corpus. The symbols that designate function are:

- (a) = article, definite
- (a,) = article, indefinite
- (aj) = adjective
- (av) = adverb
- (c) = conjunction
- (/) = contraction
- (i) = interjection
- (n) = noun
- (p) = preposition
- (pn) = pronoun
- (v) = verb

Location codes are displayed on the right-hand side of the page and appear in the sequence B: P/L. Here, B = “book,” P = “poem” or “part,” and L = “line.” The following examples illustrate how the components of the coding system should be interpreted: H: 1/t = Hojas al viento, poem 1, title; N: p2/s = Nieve, part 2 (i.e., “Mi museo ideal”), subtitle; N: 6/d = Nieve, poem 6, dedication; R: 21/10 = Rimas, poem 21, line 10. Upon examining the forma entries displayed above, the reader will observe that the “book” code appears only once in a given series and governs all locations in the collection represented by the series, that a comma separates location data for a word which occurs more than once in the same poem, that a semicolon is used to indicate that the next occurrence of the word is to be found in a new poem, and that a period shows that there are no further occurrences of the word in the collection designated by the “book” code which introduces the series.

The most comprehensive listing is the Master Location Index (#1). This includes all words found in poem headings and in the text proper. Wherever lemma homographs occur, a comprehensive heading introduces the group, each lemma contained in the group is identified by its function, and frequency figures are provided both for the heading and for the lemmas subsumed under it. The word adiós exemplifies the system.

Obviously, some users of the index might wish to have words distinguished on the basis of meaning in cases where graphemic identity veils semantic difference. It was felt, however, that the grouping of lemmas by semantic characteristics as well as by graphemic ones would produce unnecessary complications. Furthermore, since the total corpus is relatively small, and since the index gives the user direct access to the contexts in which the words occur, it seemed that distinctions in grammatical function would provide a sufficient point of departure for meaningful research.

Two shorter location indexes contain full information about particular kinds of words in Casal's poetry. The Location Index of Proper Nouns (#2) is an alphabetical list of proper nouns that appear both in poem headings and in the text. The Location Index of First Word in Verse (#9) is an alphabetical list of all words that occur in initial position in every line of the text.

The Location Index of Rhyming Words (#13) differs in several respects from the listings just described. Unlike the other location indexes, this one does not provide frequency data. There are two reasons for this. First, information on the frequency of rhyme endings appears in Indexes 11 and 12. Second, the kind of frequency information that is of primary interest to the scholar is most meaningful when it is actively extrapolated from the listing by the scholar himself.⁷ Another difference in the Location Index of Rhyming Words is that forms as well as lemmas are listed throughout. On the left-hand side of the page, there is an alphabetical list of rhyme endings. Each rhyme ending is in fact a lemma. All the words that fall into each rhyme category are shown next. In essence, these words are forms that the lemma takes. As the location codes beside them indicate, the words in each category are presented in order of their appearance in the text:

-ista

exista	N: 2/65.
vista	N: 2/67.
contrista	N: 36/10.
vista	N: 36/13.
artista	N: 51/2.
amatista	N: 51/4.
artista	R: 30/33.
conquista	R: 30/35.
vista	R: 33/2.
contrista	R: 33/3.
conquista	R: 33/6.
artista	R: 33/7.
artista	R: 34/32.
materialista	R: 34/33.
vista	R: 34/35.

-istas

conquistas	H: 45/26.
artistas	H: 45/28.

By seeing which words Casal linked together and how often he caused the same words to rhyme, the scholar can study numerous questions, not the least intriguing of which is: "As far as the poet is concerned, what do rhyming words have in common besides a phonic similarity?"

b. Comparative Frequency Indexes (#3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 14). Eight of the listings are comparative frequency indexes. All of these contain four standard kinds of information: the total frequency of the word, the lemma of the word, the grammatical function of the word, and the frequency of the word in Hojas al viento (H), Nieve (N), and Rimas (R). The following is a typical entry:

	H	N	R
133 alma (n)	46	30	57

Comparative frequency listings fall into different classes depending on the nature of the word indexed and on the manner in which the entries

PLATE I

TYPES OF WORDS		METHOD OF SORTING
		Alphabetical by lemma	Frequency, exclusive of function	Frequency by function
Text Words:	all words in text	Index 3	Index 5 are sorted. Plate 1 shows the full scope of the indexing system used to create comparative frequency listings. Some of these listings deserve special comment.

Indexes 5 and 10. By sorting words in descending frequency order, it is possible to see the relative position of any word on an absolute scale and to focus on words that occupy a given position on that scale. The following entries will be noted, for example, in the Comparative Frequency Index of Text Words by Frequency (#5):

		H	N	R
233	como (c)	65	66	102
65	cual (c)	16	19	30

The Comparative Frequency Index of First Word in Verse (#10) shows that these words appear often as initial words in the line and have frequencies that are roughly proportionate to the overall totals seen in Index 5:

		H	N	R
158	como (c)	44	41	73
45	cual (c)	14	10	21

These data give rise to several important questions concerning the poet's use of simile. Once the questions are formulated, the Master Location Index (#1) and the Location Index of First Word in Verse (#9) can be used to find the contexts in which simile occurs.

Index 14. In addition to presenting the total frequency, the lemma, the grammatical function, and the comparative frequency figures for each entry, the C.F. Index of Rhyming Words by Lemma and Form lists all rhyming words that are derived from the lemma. The following is a representative portion of Index 14:

		H	N	R
2	arte (n)
	arte	0	1	0
	artes	0	0	1
1	artificial (aj)
	artificial	1	0	0
5	artista (n)
	artista	0	1	3
	artistas	1	0	0
1	ascender (v)
	ascienden	0	1	0

With the help of this index, the scholar can ascertain whether a given lemma (e.g., artista) has forms that appear in rhyming position and which forms of the word are employed. Since the forms (artista, artistas) are displayed, the rhyme ending groups to which they belong are evident (-ista, -istas). The next step is to look up the endings in the Location Index of Rhyming Words (#13) and examine all the rhyming words grouped in the categories -ista, -istas (see p. xi). In this way, it is possible to discern the conceptual-scope of the rhyming words and to consider the frequency with which each concept occurs. In the case of -ista and -istas, the following data can be gathered:

- 5 artista(s)
- 4 vista
- 3 conquista(s)
- 2 contrista
- 1 amatista
- 1 exista
- 1 materialista

The last step, of course, is to try to explain why the -ista/-istas category has the scope it does and why certain concepts are repeated.

Naturally, each scholar will wish to formulate his own questions about the literary language of Julián del Casal and the Modernist Movement to which he belonged. Whatever those questions may be, it is hoped that the data contained in this volume will be of value to the specialist in accomplishing his research task.

NOTES

1 The system is described by Robert Jay Glickman and Gerrit Joseph Staalman in Manual for the Printing of Literary Texts and Concordances by Computer (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1966).

2 See Robert Jay Glickman, "An Integrated Series of Computer Programs for Literary Research" (paper delivered at Conference 16, Modern Language Association, 27 December 1965).

3 Words contained in the poems that make up the Varia section of Volume I are not included in the indexes of Volume III. This is so because in 1968, when, for various reasons, it was necessary to do the computer work, the Varia texts had not been established to the editor's complete satisfaction. Suspecting that important evidence concerning the Varia existed, but unable to find it before the computer runs were made, the editor decided that it would be wiser to produce accurate indexes to the 144 poems which comprise the collected works than to risk adulterating the listings with words found in non-definitive versions of the 13 additional poems. As it turned out, the decision was a prudent one, for extensive new evidence regarding the Varia did come to light in 1973. The result is that although 13 poems are not accounted for, the indexes contained in this volume are extremely reliable. Only a few entries must be modified, and this is due to second thoughts on the part of the editor after the indexes were printed. The changes which should be made are the addition of a1 (/) R: 31/10 and the following substitutions: 1a (pn) R: 24/40 > 1e (pn) R: 24/40, rastrojo (n) R: 22/3 > abrojo (n) R: 22/3, vivir (v) R: 41/82 > crecer (v) R: 41/82, and yo (pn) R: 9/30 > y (c) R: 9/30. Frequency figures must be altered by 1 in these cases. Finally, the designation of words in the following headings should be changed from d (dedication) to s (subtitle): H7, H9, H14, H15, H19, H23, H27, H34, H36, and H40. Frequency figures are not affected in these instances.

4 The term lemma is defined by Roberto Busa as "a title of the paradigm which groups all the inflections of an inflected word" ("An Inventory of Fifteen Million Words," in Literary Data Processing Conference Proceedings [New York: IBM-MLA, 1964], p. 70).

5 The indexes of rhyme endings are drawn only from poems in which consonant rhyme occurs. Data concerning assonance patterns are found in the Rimas section of Volume II.

6 In order to simplify research on certain aspects of style, occasional exceptions have been made to the general rule of listing words by lemma. The following are two cases in which the form, rather than the lemma, is given: definite and indefinite articles are listed separately according to gender and number; foreign words are recorded just as they appear in the text, and the language from which they come is identified in parenthesis after the function (see noctis and nox, for example). It was also decided that forms such as al (< a el), al (< a la), del (< de el), del (< de la), la (> el), una (> un), and y (> e) should be entered separately so that derivation could be shown.

7 See my discussion of the concept artista, below.

Acknowledgments

I wish to express my deepest gratitude to the following organizations and individuals for their part in helping me to produce the indexes that are contained in this volume: to the Canada Council, the National Research Council of Canada, and the Office of Research Administration of the University of Toronto for so generously funding my studies on the application of computers to literary and linguistic research; to IBM Canada, Ltd., for providing me with essential technical direction and advice; to Professor Calvin C. Gotlieb of the Department of Computer Science and Professor Geoffrey L. Stagg of the Department of Hispanic Studies, University of Toronto, for giving me their unreserved encouragement and support during the computer phase of my research; to Richard Aylesworth and Gerrit Joseph Staalman for the care and dedication with which they wrote the index-compilation and printing programs that I requested; to the Computer Centre of the University of Toronto for supplying me with all the machine time necessary to test and run those programs; and to Sonja Kastner for accurately transcribing Casal's poetry into machine-readable form and meticulously updating the "Vertical List" which served as the basis for most of the indexes that comprise this volume.

Finally, I should like to give special thanks to the Humanities Research Council of Canada for generously awarding me the grant in aid of publication that has made it possible for these indexes to appear in print.
